

Bilborough College

Meet the Governors Governor Profile

Doug Ingram

Doug has a passion for high quality education! Good education is more empowering than just about anything else. Having previously been involved in teaching in various different contexts (outdoor pursuits, church youth work, as pastor in a church, theological education in colleges, seminaries and universities), he now teaches on the Arts and Humanities Foundation Year at the University of Nottingham. This provides a route into Arts and Humanities degrees at the University for students who, for good reason, have under-performed in their A-levels, BTEC, etc. Doug did his degrees in Theology many years ago in Scotland. A shift in focus to education led him to take a PGCHE and he is now working towards an MA in Higher Education. He has previously been a governor at an infant school and a secondary school. His wife is Deputy Headteacher at an infant school and both his sons attended Bilborough. One son went on to a degree at Leeds, the other has attended colleges in Leicester and Nottingham.

For leisure, Doug enjoys pretty much any sport, particularly if it is outdoors and involves water! (E.g., he is a keen SCUBA diver.) Music is another passion, playing (though not much now) and listening – sipping a coffee (or a beer), chatting to good friends and listening to jazz is a superb combination. He also enjoys the cinema and the theatre, when time and/or money allow!