Andy Messent

With almost 30 years of working in various roles in education, Andy is looking to support the continued success and development of Bilborough College. The roles he has undertaken have been broad and varied and always focussed on putting the child at the centre of every action taken. Every person here, adult and student, has the right to feel listened to and valued. A student who feels happy and supported is a young person who will achieve in education and in life.

Since growing up in north west London and catching the bug, Andy says a lot of his life seems to have had a football theme and he says subsequently he has a dislike of the colour red... He cycles regularly and has a love of all things outdoors; he has enjoyed spending time with his family over the years walking the coastal paths of Anglesey and the mountains in Snowdonia & Southern Europe. He is a confirmed Francophile since learning the language at school and later marrying into a family with strong links to the European continent – he is very pleased that his three teenage children have all inherited this love of languages and travel.
