King Edward VI College's mission is simple to articulate; To transform the way we do sixth form education, inspiring young people to gain the skills they need to thrive in an everchanging world. The college is currently on a journey to meet this mission via becoming a values based, deliberately developmental organisation (DDO). A DDO is best described and understood by categorising the culture into three sections – Mindsets, Community and Practices and Systems, which interconnect and influence one another.

Operating as a DDO will help us meet our mission via our values. This is what a DDO looks like

A DDO's organisational culture is very demanding and progressive but safe and rewarding. We ask interested candidates for all positions to reflect on if you share our enthusiasm for working in this way and as a middle leader, the successful candidate will be a key driver of progress.
